MEMPHIS, January 26, 1871.

PROBABLY COURSE OF COTTON.

Smith, Edwards & Co., of Liverpool, in their Annual Cotton Circular, say the favorite estimates of the present American crop is 8, 750,000 bales, against 8, 25,000 commercial crop) last year, and 2,250,000 theyers are before. Some writers go as high as four million, and a few still hold to three and a balf million. No doubt the present also of receipts points to a large fresh and 200 for preserved.

Fresh and 200 for be preserved.

Fresh and 200 for be preserved.

Fresh and preser difficult to form an opinion; it has been greatly reduced the past year on account of the war, probably to the extent of 30,000 bales as compared with what it would have been in peace. Should the war unhappily last far late next year there may se no lucrease on the diminished quantity taken this past year; but we think the balance of probability inelices the other way. We are in hopes that the end of this destructive context is not very far of, and if it comes sarly in the apring there will be a large demand for a time to fill the wold created. We like the context will be a large demand for a time to fill the wold created. We the spring there will be a large demand for a time to fill the void created. We would expect, in that case, a great increase in the volume of our exports, specially if—as we suppose, the Continent gets much less direct from America—ingels much less direct from America—ingels much less direct from America—ingels much less very presses, we exported 200 000 bales more than last year—asy 855 000 bales ingels of 6 8 000 bales. No doubt it is true that the exhaustion caused by the war will be felt most severely afterward, and we fear it will be long before Frances regains prosperity after such an awful visitation, but the demand for cotton containing its of the Continent price of cotton will naturally increase the consumption of all ports of the Continent tot affected by the war. Balancing these considerations, we incline to think

If prices remain moderate. The general conclusion to which we come is that American cotton at 51 per pound is about American cotion at 51 per pound is about the war its natural level of price. Should the war itself for into the next year it may drop considerably below it, but a reaction would be sure to come later on, for if prices at the planting time rule below 8d a less breadth of land will be sown, planters will hold back the remainder of the cross and the action will call ground the come action of the call ground the come action will be sown. choice, 13%14c; yellow do, 11%312%c; choice Louistana, old process, 17%12%c; prime, 11%612c; fully fair, 11%11%c; that next crop will be much smaller.
